

AUTHOR'S NOTES

Gary W. Copeland is Associate Professor of Political Science and Associate Director of the Carl Albert Congressional Research and Studies Center at the University of Oklahoma. His research on Congress, elections, and representative government has appeared in edited volumes and in such journals as the Journal of Politics and Legislative Studies Quarterly. He is the coeditor of Congressional Budgeting. (1984).

Harry Holloway taught in the Department of Political Science at the University of Oklahoma until his retirement in 1991. His interests include public opinion, interest groups, and corruption.

Jason Kirksey is finishing his Ph.D. at the University of New Orleans, where he holds a fellowship from the Southern Regional Council for Minority Voting Rights. He is a Louisiana Board of Regents Fellow, an American Political Science Association African-American Fellow and the 1991 recipient of the Ted Robinson Memorial Award (presented by the Southwestern Political Science Association).

Melanie McCoy is Assistant Professor of Political Science at Southeastern Oklahoma State University. Her research on minority politics in the United States has recently appeared in Women & Politics. Her current research interests include Native American tribal politics and core curriculum reform.

Frank S. Meyers, a University of Oklahoma Ph.D., teaches in the Cameron University Department of Politics, Sociology, and Criminal Justice. His interests include state and local government, public policy, methods, public administration, public opinion, and political corruption.

Michael Sharp is an Assistant Professor at Northeastern State University in Tahlequah. His research in data collection appears in The Directory of Congressional Voting Scores and Interest Group Ratings. His current research interests are in congressional campaigns and elections and election data gathering.

Joseph T. Van Ness is an Instructor of Political Science at Oral Roberts University in Tulsa. He teaches primarily undergraduate American and International Political Theory and Political Systems. He has presented papers at the Oklahoma Political Science Association and the Southwestern Social Science Association. His current research interests include the development of ideology in the American Midwest and the roots of political behavior.

Theodore M. Vestal is Associate Professor of Political Science at Oklahoma State University. His research on American politics has appeared in Publius, Policy Studies Review, Tulsa Law Journal, and the monograph series of the Bureau of Government Research, the University of Oklahoma. His current research interests include international education and the National Security Education Act.

David E. Wright III is finishing his Ph.D. at the University of Houston. He has presented papers at the Oklahoma Political Science Association and the Southwest Social Science Association. His current areas of interest include American policy, personnel administration, and public policy, especially education policy.