

CONTRIBUTORS

Jessica Cuellar is a graduate student in Political Science at Oklahoma State University.

James A. Davis is an Associate Professor in Political Science at Oklahoma State University teaching American and Applied Politics. He is a recipient of the Regents Distinguished Teaching Award and has published on Native-Americans and Democratic partisans in Oklahoma as well as minority police officers in Oklahoma and Texas.

Rick Farmer is the director of committee staff at the Oklahoma House of Representatives and an adjunct professor at Southern Nazarene University. He completed his Ph.D. at the University of Oklahoma, where his dissertation focused on Oklahoma's legislative term limits. He is the coeditor of two books on term limits and the author of many articles and chapters in the field.

Kenneth Hess is an undergraduate major in Public Relations and Political Science Oklahoma State University.

Ken Hicks is an associate professor of political science in the Behavioral and Social Sciences Department at Rogers State University, a small liberal arts university located in Northeastern Oklahoma. His research interests include political theory, terrorism and media studies. Professor Hicks serves on the executive board of the Oklahoma Political Science Association, and is the department head of the newly-formed Department of History and Political Science at Rogers State University.

Aaron L. Mason is an Assistant Professor of Political Science at Northwestern Oklahoma State University in Alva, Oklahoma. He is married to DeeAnn Mason and has two children named Hannah and Morgan.

Jesse Perez Mendez is an assistant professor in the School of Educational Studies at Oklahoma State University. His research interests include issues of postsecondary access, higher education history and higher education law.

Sai Sekhar Metla is a graduate student in Industrial Engineering at Oklahoma State University and a research assistant in Political Science.

Tiffany L. Nixon is a doctoral student in the School of Educational Studies at Oklahoma State University. Her research interests include retention of students of color, multicultural education and athletes in higher education.

Shad Satterthwaite is a Visiting Assistant Professor in the Political Science Department at the University of Oklahoma

Tony E. Wohlers is an Assistant Professor of Political Science at Cameron University. Tony holds a Ph.D. from the Northern Illinois University and he has presented and published research on biotechnology policies and e-government trends in the United States and across different industrialized democracies.