

NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

Charles Peaden, Ph.D. is an associate professor of political science and active with the water resource management and policy master's program at East Central University. He teaches classes on the U.S. presidency, campaigns and elections, political parties and interest groups, the legislative process and of course American government. In the master's program, he teaches environmental conflict management and natural resource history and policy. Dr. Peaden is active in state and local party politics. Charles has authored or coauthored several peer-reviewed articles, with a recent focus on water resources and related disputes and conflicts regarding natural resources, both in domestic and international contexts.

Rick Farmer, Ph.D. is dean of the J. Rufus Fears Fellowship at the Oklahoma Council of Public Affairs. Previously, he served as director of committee staff for the Oklahoma House of Representatives, director of the Oklahoma Workers' Compensation Commission, and deputy insurance commissioner. Dr. Farmer earned tenure teaching applied politics at the University of Akron in Ohio. In 2016 he received OPSA's Robert Darcy Lifetime Achievement Award.

Christine Pappas, J.D., Ph.D. is Chair of the Department of Politics, Law, and Society and Professor of Political Science at East Central University. She teaches and publishes on tribal politics, Racism in the US, and women in US politics. She is the Chair of the City of Ada Multiculturalism Committee, the Faculty Advisor of ECU Pride, and a member of the Oklahoma Indian Legal Services Advisory Board. Pappas was the first woman president of the Oklahoma Political Science Association.

Dr. Erick Ananga is an Assistant Professor at East Central University in Ada, Oklahoma. He earned his doctorate in Geography and Environmental Science & Policy from the University of South Florida, a master's in Politics and International Development from the University of East Anglia Norwich, United Kingdom, and a bachelor's in International Development Studies with Economics major from the University of East Anglia Norwich, United Kingdom. His research focuses on examining the tenability of community participation theory in explicating water production and management dynamics in urban informal neighborhoods. His research has been published in many journals including: Oxford University Press Journal of Community Development, Habitat International, Land Use Policy, International Journal of Sustainable Water Resource Management, International Journal of Applied Earth Observation and Geoinformation, Social Indicators Research, Sustainable Water Resource Management, Energies, SN Social Sciences, and Journal of Asian and African Studies.

Kimberly Elkin is an Aquatic Ecologist with The Nature Conservancy- Oklahoma Chapter. She is the Watershed Health Director for a statewide program that monitors the health of streams and rivers across Oklahoma. She holds a Master's Degree in Zoology/Ichthyology and a Master's Degree in Water Policy Resources and Management. She has worked as a professional biologist with Native American organizations, state governments, and non-profit organizations for 19 years. She is an avid gardener, outdoor enthusiast, hunter, fisherwoman, and loves to volunteer at the local animal shelter.

Gidong Kim is a Ph.D. Candidate in Political Science at the University of Missouri. His research interests include political behavior (voting and elections) and political psychology.

Jordan Butcher is an Assistant Professor of Political Science at Arkansas State University. Her research explores legislative institutions and political careerism

Travis A. Younce, ABD, MAIR, MHR, AGC(IW/AW/SW)(ret) is a PhD candidate at Helm's School of Government working on his dissertation How Does Integrated Regulations Between Tribal, State, and Federal Water Rights Impact Water Use of Central Oklahoma? with an anticipation of completion in December 2022. His focus for his PhD is Public Policy emphasis in National Security and culminates 21 years of active-duty Naval service with a focus on intelligence, environmental, and oceanographic studies. Younce was a panel participant and presented a paper on Constitutional Crisis and the Tenth Amendment held at Liberty University March 2021. He is actively seeking academic employment, has traveled to more than 30 countries, and is blessed to have the support his wife, Emily, and three children.