

AUTHOR'S NOTES

Rick Farmer is currently a political science Ph.D. candidate at the University of Oklahoma. He received his Bachelor of Arts at Northeastern State University in 1985.

David L. Nixon is Assistant Professor of Political Science at Oklahoma State University. His primary research interests deal with American institutional dynamics and U.S. foreign policy.

William M. Parle is Head of the Department of Political Science at Oklahoma State University. He teaches courses in public administration and public policy.

John David Rausch, Jr., is Assistant Professor of Political Science at Fairmont State College in Fairmont, West Virginia and a former fellow in the Carl Albert Congressional Research and Studies Center at the University of Oklahoma. His dissertation examines the role of elites in driving the legislative term limitation phenomenon. He has published articles on term limits in Oklahoma Politics and the National Civic Review. Other research interests include legislative studies and direct democracy.

Harold V. Sare is Professor Emeritus of Political Science at Oklahoma State University. His professional interests include U.S. trade policy and Asian politics. He recently returned from Japan where he taught at the O.S.U.-Kameoka Campus.

Phillip M. Simpson is Professor of Political Science at Cameron University in Lawton. He holds degrees in his field from the University of North Texas and the University of Arizona (Ph.D.). His interests are American government, Oklahoma government, the courts, corruption, legislative and executive politics, and American political theory.