

AUTHOR'S NOTES

Michael Connelly is Associate Professor of Political Science at Southwestern Oklahoma State University in Weatherford. His research and publication interests include policy and administration, particularly in the areas of education and criminal justice. From 1986 through 1995, he served on the school board of the Weatherford Public Schools.

Terry Garrett, an instructor of Political science at Southwestern Oklahoma State University in Weatherford, is finishing his Ph.D. at the University of Oklahoma. His current areas of interest include public administration, international relations and comparative politics.

Rebekah Herrick, an Oklahoma State University Associate Professor of Political Science, has published in the areas of women and politics, congressional careers, and political ambition.

Judith S. Kaufman, Hofstra University assistant professor of Curriculum and Teaching, has published in the areas of emotion and cognition, child development, pedagogy and gay and lesbian studies.

Marie Miville, Oklahoma State University Assistant Professor of Counseling Psychology, has research interests in multicultural issues in psychology, gender issues, wellness, students development, and the universal aspects of counseling.

Gregory Moss is Assistant Professor of Educational Administration and chair of the Department of School Service Programs at Southwestern Oklahoma State University in Weatherford. His professional interests include educational policy studies, school finance, organizational behavior, and educational legal issues. He served the Weatherford Public Schools as superintendent from 1990 until 1995.

Phillip M. Simpson is professor of political Science at Cameron University in Lawton. He holds degrees in his field from the University of North Texas and the University of Arizona (Ph.D.). His interests are American government, Oklahoma government, the courts, corruption, legislative and executive politics, and American political theory.