

CONTRIBUTORS

Jeffrey Birdsong is department chair of history and political science and teaches American government, geography, public administration and philosophy. He lives in Miami and is a third generation Oklahoman.

Larry Eberhardt is department chair of the political science department at Oklahoma City University. He teaches survey U.S. government and upper-division classes in international relations, comparative, and U.S. foreign policy.

Aimee Franklin is assistant professor of public administration at the University of Oklahoma. Her teaching and research interests include government reform, public budgeting and finance, public management, and organization culture and ethics.

Kenneth Hicks teaches at Rogers State University in Claremore where he is assistant professor.

Cal Hobson was elected to the Oklahoma State Senate District 16 in 1990 of which he serves currently as the President ProTem. He was also a member of the Oklahoma House of Representatives between 1978-1990. He served, among other assignments, as the chairman of the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on Education and has received several education awards.

Richard Johnson is associate professor at Oklahoma City University where he teaches American government, comparative government, public administration, and Oklahoma politics.

Paulette Jones teaches at Oklahoma City Community College where she is an adjunct faculty. She teaches on-line courses as well as courses in the usual format.

Charles Peaden is an instructor at East Central University. He teaches American government, state and local government, and environmental policy and politics.

Brett S. Sharp teaches public administration, public policy and public personnel administration at the University of Central Oklahoma where he is assistant professor.

Alvin O. Turner is Dean of the School of Humanities and Social Sciences at East Central University in Ada.

Jean Warner runs a summer institute with Cindy Simon Rosenthal which is designed to increase the number of women in elective office in Oklahoma.