

Control groups will be used to test to what extent changes among participants can be attributed to the experimental processes of transnational membership in "solidary" groups engaged in critical social analysis.

It is hoped that this research will advance the scientific measure of identities, and further understanding of how commitment impacts identity salience (cf. Stryker, 1987; Stryker & Serpe, 1982). This research also draws on the work of Alain Touraine (1985) and the study of new social movements.
